I'm making an Android app, and I use the three following lines in my class: // without new super.greet(); this.greet(); MyClass.greet(); // with new MyClass mc = new MyClass(this); mc.greet(); //no new or super this.greet(); MyClass.greet(); When I tried to access greet() with super, this or new, the error "cannot resolve method greet()" was showing. I've already tried to use the methods static, but when I added that the error kept going. Why do I need to use super? What does it mean that the app can't find the method? A: Each of those three lines can (in a constructor) return this (if that is the goal of the constructor): // constructor: public class MyClass { public MyClass(MyClass me) { // constructor calls me, which returns this // which is then used as the `this` for the `MyClass.greet` call this.g
