In spite of all the problems of climate change, the fact remains that the earth's temperature is now consistent and global temperatures are at all-time highs. Yet, how can we all be so concerned about the future of humanity on this planet, when no one can tell how we will survive this coming winter? I have never, ever, had any direct contact with the mainstream media, and I could care less about the opinions of people who think they know something about global warming. Perhaps I am being a cynic, perhaps I am just not interested. I still think we need to be concerned with the future of humanity, even if we cannot pinpoint the cause of the current problems, of which there are many. I think humanity has a moral obligation to our planet and its ecosystem. If we are too ignorant to know how to tackle global warming, then we can at least start by stopping the environmental degradation, i.e. doing all we can to preserve the Earth's pristine wildernesses. The planetary ecosystem may be young, but it is very fragile. We cannot risk destroying it in a few short years if we are to have any chance of continuing to survive. It may be
