

Fans have been able to experience this new technology in pre-release gameplay since yesterday's FIFA 20 beta. If it proves successful, it will carry over to the main game, when it releases on September 28 on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC. In this week's IGN First video, IGN Pro League co-caster Daniel "ddk" Kapadia runs through his views on the technology: "I think it's fantastic that they are taking the time to do these test runs. A lot of players don't like hyper-responsiveness, where the ball is feeling very different. We've done some testing with last year's FIFA, and it's almost like a different ball, because the physics feels completely different. I think that this will be a great evolution on that front." Graphics FIFA 22 features new day/night cycles, improved lighting and weather conditions, as well as new character animations and facial expressions. The animation team has also focused on improving the way animations change depending on the time of day, weather and season. The game's visual effects engine has also been upgraded. New particle and light effects have been added, as well as an improved geometry and character model pipeline. The improvements also help simulate a better reflection of light, which can be seen in day/night cycles. The first trailer for this feature, below, shows how an early build of a day/night cycle looks. The game's visual effects team has also tried to replicate real-world environmental effects, such as road surfaces, fog and grass. Creative The official launch trailer for this feature, which is narrated by actor Robert De Niro, is below. It shows the new expressions, animations and lighting effects that have been created for this year's FIFA game. The trailer also shows off some new animation techniques, including rag doll physics for AI characters. In addition, the game now has a new soundtrack, which has been recorded in a recording studio built from the ground up for the game's creative team. Controls FIFA 22 introduces a new control scheme that includes the ability to easily toggle kick passing on or off. Players can move and place their players using
