Statins and ezetimibe are two well known cholesterol lowering agents. They are orally administered inhibitors of HMG-CoA reductase. In this work, we have docked simvastatin and ezetimibe in HMG-CoA reductase from Mycobacterium tuberculosis, a homolog of the human enzyme, and elucidated the binding interactions and the modes of interaction of each drug with the protein. Molecular dynamics simulation was applied to study the dynamics of protein binding interaction. We identified the binding interactions of the drug-protein complex and suggest that, besides the known binding site of simvastatin, the heme active site of the enzyme should be the other additional binding site. The present study also sheds light on the potential use of

HMG-CoA reductase as a drug target.Fire
